(sinon). They are just stuck in the shell. I'm not sure what would cause this. I ran memprofiler (I have tried it with different frameworks and they all report the same thing) and it says that the majority of the memory is being used in the UIKit. However, if I look at the memory allocation in the xcode console, it shows that only 4 blocks are being used, so the memory utilization is ~1.6MB. I've looked through the code and nothing really stands out. Any ideas? A: I had to adjust the profile's max frame rate from 60 to 1. The default rate causes frames to be dropped whenever the animation will be very time-consuming. Setting the maximum rate to 1 should resolve the issue. Friday, April 12, 2013 I've been thinking about how the economic slump will affect church planting in many ways. On the one hand, it means churches with poor and low income members may not be able to economically support additional ministries. This will force many churches to shut down or substantially reduce their offering. On the other hand, it also means that there is a strong possibility that churches that have been in existence a while will be able to maintain or increase their offerings even while they are experiencing a financial crunch. They may have been able to do so before due to "mission creep" (expanding ministries beyond their core focus). I'm sure that a lot of this is already taking place. What do you think? Do you know any churches that have been able to weather the financial storm? How did you adapt to the financial stress? 2 comments: I'm not sure if you'd actually consider our church to be the type of church that can weather a financial storm. We started the church two decades ago to meet the needs of our community. And we have done that over those two decades. We certainly didn't intentionally set out to become a mega-church. But in our early years we did reach out to communities, both the poor and the middle class, as well as neighborhoods with troubled youth. We've been faithful to our roots, continuing to serve people where they are and not moving them further away from God. But we've been living with a serious crunch for several years now, and I think it will continue for the foreseeable future. We don't know what will happen to the housing market. That doesn't seem to be a factor that 82157476af
